Individual coaching can transform leaders, but it is often too costly to provide across the organisation. Harrison Paradox Navigator solves this by helping leaders understand their genuine strengths, identify critical development priorities, and apply actionable guidance to transform how they lead.

Instead of limiting one-to-one coaching to a small group of senior leaders, Paradox Navigator enables organisations to extend meaningful behavioural development across teams, levels, and regions — without the cost and logistical demands of providing individual coaching for every leader.

WHAT WE SOLVE

Three leadership development challenges

Training builds knowledge, but has limited impact on behaviour.

Leadership programs teach valuable concepts and skills, but lasting change happens when leaders connect those ideas to their own behavioural patterns.

SOLUTION

Paradox Navigator turns personalised insight into practical development that is relevant and immediately applicable.

Coaching works. But it's difficult to scale.

One-to-one coaching creates powerful leadership growth, yet it is often too costly and time-intensive to provide across an organisation.

SOLUTION

Paradox Navigator delivers coaching-depth behavioural insight through a guided digital experience—at a fraction of the cost.

Perceived strengths can be blind spots.

Many leadership strengths become liabilities when they are not balanced by the right complementary behaviours—for example, frankness needs diplomacy, confidence needs openness to other perspectives, and enforcing needs empathy.

SOLUTION

Paradox Navigator enables leaders to know whether their strong traits are genuine strengths or potential risks.
